

A BAY ST. LOUIS FIREFIGHTER, assisting the Clermont Harbor Volunteer Fire Department, climbs to the roof of a Clermont Harbor home Tuesday during efforts to extinguish a fire which started in the kitchen. Hancock County Fire Marshal Jay Marsh, who completed his investigation into the blaze Thursday, said the residence, which belonged to Ray and Lana Bingham, was about 50 percent destroyed. No injuries were reported in connection with the fire and Marsh said the couple has told him they plan to rebuild.

Taylor favors investigation into nursing home bill changes

BY DENA BISNETTE

A legislative PEER Committee investigation into a House-Senate conference committee's action on a nursing home bill should look into the denial of a certificate of need for a skilled nursing facility on Dunbar Avenue, State Senator Gene Taylor has said.

The investigation, authorized back in May, has been looking into the denial of such a certificate to a proposed facility at Biloxi during the 1988 legislative session.

Because the state currently has a moratorium on new nursing home beds except in areas with a demonstrated need, certificates for new facilities or expansion must be obtained through the legislature.

Last year, when Southern Health Enterprises, Inc., purchased the former Hancock

General Hospital building from the county to establish an intermediate nursing facility, company representatives told the board of supervisors that they planned to add a skilled facility later.

When and if the proposed facility could be developed hinged upon whether a certificate of need would be granted.

After the certificate was denied, a representative of Commercial Realty Associates, the firm which had helped negotiate the sale to Southern Health Enterprises, appeared before the board to ask for a resolution. That resolution, written for forwarding to the PEER Committee, requested the inclusion of the Dunbar Avenue facility in the investigation.

The PEER Committee serves as the investigative arm of the legislature and looks into ethical questions such as conflict of interest.

An attorney general's opinion handed down in July, in answer to Lt. Governor Bard Dye's opposition to the investigation, ruled that PEER did indeed have the authority to investigate the actions of the joint conference committee.

Taylor agrees with that opinion and the need for an investigation.

"I was absolutely furious," he recalled. "We had passed it (authorization for the certificates for the Dunbar Avenue and Biloxi facilities) through both houses."

"It was included in the expansion of the nursing home bill. It had passed the house and senate and had gone to joint conference."

Taylor explained that, with regard to the certificates, there was no need for compromise because "that language passed both houses word for word." He said the conferees "took it on themselves to change it."

Taylor declined comment on allegations regarding possible influence by a former senator who is related to the owners of nursing homes in the Gulf Coast area.

However, he said he feels rejecting language that had passed both houses should not have been possible.

"It all gets back to my original challenge of how the legislature does business," stated the senator, who was one of several legislators who filed a lawsuit to change some of the powers held by the lieutenant governor more than three years ago.

Taylor stated that "the conferees have too much power" and disapproves of provisions allowing them to meet in secret.

The problems these two features cause "first showed up in the form of punitive measures regarding the teachers' strike," which he said were added in joint conference.

"In this case, the reverse happened. Something which had already been agreed upon was taken out," the senator said.

"There are hundreds of conference reports every session, but these two just stand out."

"Hopefully, if this is foul play, the PEER Committee will uncover that," he added.

Taylor plans to try again to obtain the certificates during the next legislative session, which begins in January, because if the 60-bed facility is approved, "that's 60 more people who could be cared for."

The senator explained that, in his opinion, the root of the problem is not the denial but how the six-member joint conference committee is chosen.

Three are picked by the speaker of the house of representatives. Taylor feels that the way these three are chosen is correct, but disputes the power of the lieutenant governor to choose the other three.

"I have been working on this since I got to the senate. Part of the lawsuit against the lieutenant governor was to keep him from naming these people and therefore controlling how half the committee votes. And, it doesn't take long after someone gets to the legislature to tell how he's going to vote."

"In many cases, the report of the joint conference is, in effect, written by the lieutenant governor, and that's not right," Taylor added. "He's not a member of the legislature and there should be a clear separation of powers."

"I believe the senate should control its own business."

He believes the senate should select its committees based on seniority, that committees should choose their own chairmen and then those chairmen should select the conferees.

Taylor is not discouraged that the Mississippi Supreme Court overturned a decision favorable to him and the other plaintiffs in the lawsuit, because "the fact that the Supreme Court reversed it did nothing but send the ball back to the senate."

He added that he does expect the rules regarding selection of conferees to be changed within two years, because "having a system that is set up wrong flies in the face of good government and separation of powers."

No date announced yet for election of successor in Fifth District post

Gov. Ray Mabus must announce within 55 days from today when a special election will be conducted to replace Rep. Larkin Smith.

Smith's death in an airplane crash one week ago leaves the Fifth District seat in the House of Representatives vacant with less than one year of his term completed. Smith had served less than eight months.

The election will be non-partisan, although both parties are likely to seek candidates to succeed Smith, who is a Republican.

The election must take place within 40 days of Mabus' announcement.

That time period would make it possible to cut election expenses by using a Nov. 7 date, the same day that Hancock, Harrison and Stone County voters will go to the polls to select a new district attorney.

Attorney Joe Meadows is the interim appointee and will serve until the election of a successor to Glenn Cannon, who resigned.

In addition, Hancock County has a special election coming up that day for East District constable. Leo Ladner, a sheriff's deputy, has been appointed by the board of supervisors to serve in the interim.

The term, vacated when Paul Ladner resigned last month, has about two and one-half years left.

Harrison County voters also have a special election set up to replace two supervisors and Smith himself, who was serving a term as sheriff when he was elected to the House of Representatives.

Those who wish to qualify for the District Five seat must obtain 1,000 voter signatures on a petition that will be sent to the secretary of state's office. Qualifying deadline will be 20 days prior to the date set for the election.

If a run-off is needed, it will be two weeks after the special election.

Lombardo murder suspects questioned in Ladner death

BY DENA BISNETTE

Two women expected to be extradited Saturday to Hancock County on charges connected with the Dec. 25, 1985 shooting death of Bay St. Louis resident Frank Lombardo remain in California.

They are being questioned in connection with the death of a former Hancock Countian in California last year.

Fran Frierson Lombardo, widow of the slain Frank Lombardo, and her 21-year-old daughter, Mari Elizabeth Lombardo, are being held without bail on murder charges in Lombardo's death.

Frank Lombardo's body was discovered in his McDonald Lane home after it burned. Fran Lombardo, then his estranged wife, later collected $200,000 on a double indemnity insurance policy naming her beneficiary, Police Chief Ray Murphy said.

According to Murphy, the women moved to Chino Hills, Calif., in 1987, shortly after a 1986 fire destroyed their Diamondhead home.

They were scheduled to be extradited Saturday but asked for an extension until Monday in order to take care of personal business, Murphy said Saturday.

They originally waived extradition procedures and had planned to return to Mississippi voluntarily.

If they change their minds, Murphy said, extradition procedures could take from 60 to 90 days.

"Orange County officials will notify us on Monday about what happened in court and what they decided to do," the police chief said.

Murphy said Orange County authorities were also questioning the women as suspects in the death of former Kiln resident Kendrick Garland Ladner.

Fran Lombardo reported Ladner missing 20 days after his body was found Oct. 1, 1988, near an Orange County Park. The body had been burned and identification was not possible until Dec. 6 due to difficulty in matching fingerprints.

Local campers attend ACA's 'Camp Rainbow'

BY JANET MCQUEEN

Two Hancock County girls spent three days last week at an untraditional summer camp—one especially designed for children with cancer.

Sponsored by the American Cancer Society, Camp Rainbow offers normal camp activities such as swimming, tennis, horseback riding and arts and crafts in rural Simpson County.

Youths ages six through 19 who have or have had cancer are invited to spend three days in Pinola, Miss. where around-the-clock health care is available to them.

Carrie Roche, 6, attended camp for the first time—just days after she was released from a week's stay at Oschner Foundation Hospital in New Orleans.

The perky blonde leukemia victim was queen of the annual Mardi Gras festivities at Oschner last year. Looking forward to camp, she noted "I make friends easily."

Carrie was able to complete kindergarten at St. Clare Elementary School in Waveland last year despite bouts of illness. She will begin first grade this fall.

She is the daughter of Gary and Janet Roche of Waveland.

Also attending Camp Rainbow was Andrea Newkirk, 11, of Catahoula community. She is the daughter of Evelyn Newkirk.

Andrea is looking forward to attending Hancock North Central Elementary in the fall.

The girls traveled by bus accompanied by Phyllis Moran, area director for the Mississippi Division of the American Cancer Society.

Landry comes to the court from the Mississippi Alcohol Safety Education Program where she traveled the entire state to present programs, training, and worked closely with the court systems.

Judge Haas also noted that Landry is experienced in public speaking, counseling and interpersonal skills which will increase the effectiveness of the court's enforcement program.

The duties of the school attendance officers are to monitor compulsory public school attendance, to investigate non-attendance of compulsory school age children and to counsel all school age children to attend school.

As Hancock County grows in population, the need for school attendance officers grows. Landry brings with her the experience of being intensively involved in community education programs on alcohol and substance abuse, child abuse and safety education for children and adults.

Waterway District seeks executive director

Mississippi's largest waterway district is searching for a new executive director. The Pat Harrison Waterway District is seeking a replacement for Jim Borsig, who resigned as executive director of the state agency to accept a position as chief administrative officer of the City of Hattiesburg.

Lonnie S. Meaders Jr. of Jasper County, president of the board of the 15-county district, announced procedures which will govern the selection process.

"Applications and resumes from qualified individuals should be submitted to the district office," he said. "The district headquarters is located in Hattiesburg."

A five-member nominating committee, chaired by director Diane T. Scruggs of Jackson County, will review resumes, interview applicants and submit a "short list" of the top candidates to the full 18-member board for final interviews.

"This is not a political job," Meaders emphasized. "Our executive director must oversee 110 employees, manage a $2,500,000 budget and work with local governmental officials from 15 counties, the state and the federal government."

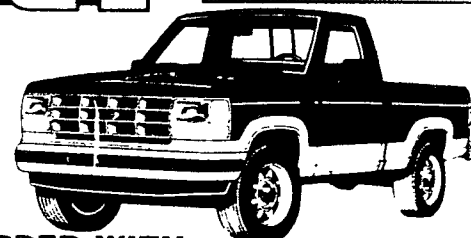

The district is responsible for flood control, water management and the operation of ten water parks and 12 boat ramps.

Death reminds us we're not here forever

Two things have happened this week that should convince a person of his own mortality.

One was the death of Congressman Larkin Smith, who was only about 15 years older than I am—and I haven't seen 31 yet.

The other one was the 20th anniversary of Hurricane Camille, a time when people were willing to share the memories of their losses and their stories of how they picked up the pieces, abandoned what couldn't be saved, and got on with their lives.

The congressman's death reminds people that they aren't immortal in a much more direct way than the hurricane's anniversary. The late Rep. Smith was someone everybody around here knew, either through news reports or having met him.

For all practical purposes, what he was doing when he died was about as dangerous as backing your car out of your driveway at home and driving over to your office. You don't have to be on a plane to get killed on your way somewhere.

The hurricane memories were a less direct reminder to me. I was about 100 miles north of here at the time and was 10 years old. I saw pine trees blown down, heard the tornadoes whistling and sat in the dark during power failures, but I didn't see the massive destruction the people here saw.

I remember going to school the following week and talking with a priest who had been assigned to a Pass Christian parish. He had gone to the coast the day after the storm and had found only the concrete steps left from his church. He was back, collecting food and other items for storm survivors, and told me, "Pass Christian is no more."

"Pass Christian is no more." I have never forgotten exactly how he phrased it, probably because I spent a long time living in a "tornado alley" and got to see the occasional building or tree that was damaged or "no more."

I can relate to the Camille survivors' stories about flooding, too, having dealt with a Civil Defense director fairly often about a particular flood zone along the Leaf River and its branches before ever considering moving to the coast.

I remember even earlier, when I was in junior high, riding with my dad on his motorcycle to a section of town where floodwaters hadn't drained off yet.

We met a girl I knew and she told me whose homes had water in them and who would miss school for a few days. Fortunately, no one would be permanently absent because the people in the neighborhood had cooperated with evacuation efforts.

Maybe I am more aware of death than many people because I'm always having to write about it. Typing an obituary for a faceless stranger is one thing, but typing them for people you know tells you, "One day, someone will have to do this for me."

I went to a lawyer and got a will set up when I was only 27.

When I told my friends, they thought I was nuts. When I told my mom, she wanted to know the age of the last auto accident fatality I had written about, which meant to me that she understood.

The fatality had involved three people; two of them were teen-age boys with the youngest being 17. I remember what it's like at 17.

I hadn't yet seen much death at 17. I could remember some of the effects on my family when my mother's father died when I was nine, but like most of my relatives, he lived far away and I never experienced the direct effects of death.

I still haven't, and don't know how I will manage when the time to do it comes. I do know that I don't see things the way a 17-year-old does.

When you're 17, you can't see yourself at 40, but you just know you're going to live forever. Then, one day, you become aware of just how transitory life really is and you become more careful. You begin to consider the risks before you try potentially dangerous things and you begin to take precautions.

There is only one practical way to react to this revelation: accept it. If you don't know how long you'll be here, you'll come to value life more.

You'll think more of those close to you and want to enjoy life with them more—that's the way I see it. You'll value possessions less and relationships more.

But sometimes, I wish I could go back to the attitude I had at 17. I wish I could believe again that I'm indestructible and will be here to enjoy myself forever.

Seven years have gone by since passage of the Education reform Act in 1982. We have made progress, but progress alone is not enough. If we are to achieve the ambitious goals outlined by the people in "Mississippi's BEST," we need to move quickly—seizing an opportunity to make choices that will ensure that Mississippi's class of 2001 is "world class."

To fail to act now would be to sentence our children to a future with little hope. Our vision must be far reaching and our actions must be bold.

COUNTY AGENT NOTES

By Lee Taylor

Tree farm requirements told

Tree farmers are landowners in Hancock County who voluntarily manage their woodlands to get the best production and return for their investment. The term "tree farm," when applied to privately-owned forestland, means the landowner has been publicly recognized for doing an outstanding job of managing.

Trees are a crop. While these crops don't require intensive cultivation, as soybeans and cotton do, there are certain practices that must be done to keep growth rate and quality high.

The basic requirements for a tree farm are:

1. The land must be in continuous ownership for one to two years.
2. Idle acres are planted to trees.
3. The land is protected from wildfire, insects, disease and overgrazing.
4. The land is managed for continuous crops of useful forest products.

When you see a tree farm sign in Hancock County, you know the owner of the land is carrying out these forestry practices. For more information on tree farming, contact the county forester.

Reflections On Life

By Father Jerome
LeDoux, SVD

Admit your hurts

That the pleasure and good of making my annual retreat this year under the guidance of Father Martin Padon, SVD, a clinical psychologist, has been dealing with our emotions, especially suppressed anger. I want to share with you my own reflections on these emotions.

Anger is a natural and plain old emotion, but it is that masking of anger and anxious feelings that is different or happy with him home to haunt the future.

Anger is a natural and plain old emotion, but it is that masking of anger and anxious feelings that is different or happy with him home to haunt the future.

Anger is a natural and plain old emotion, but it is that masking of anger and anxious feelings that is different or happy with him home to haunt the future.

Anger is a natural and plain old emotion, but it is that masking of anger and anxious feelings that is different or happy with him home to haunt the future.

those weepy, volatile, unpredictable women are usually around to nurse their sick, macho spouse, and later to bury him.

However, in terms of human values, sickness and death are the least problems associated with the macho credo of suppressing all emotional display. The heaviest and most intolerable losses occur among the living who are not outwardly sick, but who display deadly symptoms traceable to suppressed anger.

Stony silence lasting anywhere from hours to months, icy aloofness in sexual relations, deliberate ignoring of one's very existence, prolonged pouting, hurt and/or hateful stares, aggressive resistance through doing nothing and neglecting everything, and a morose nursing of thoughts of getting even, of ill-wishing and of inflicting all sorts of pain on the offender—all these are the ugly fruits of suppressed anger.

It is clear, especially from the episode of Jesus overturning the tables of the moneychangers in the temple, that anger, in itself, is neither good nor bad, neither right nor wrong. It can be used very positively, as Jesus used it, or negatively, as Jesus' enemies used it. Jesus made it clear by his own example that the only anger condemned in the Bible is anger which is out of control.

And when is anger out of control? Anger is a vice when we bury it until it explodes into irrational words and/or actions. Contrariwise, anger is healthy, a virtue, when we deal with it in a balanced manner for correction and the creation of healthy conflict. Suppression is one extreme; explosion, the other. Jesus instructs us to find the happy medium, the balance, between the two.

We pay a terrible toll in shattered nerves and mutilated peace for suppressing our hurt and anger, and we invariably exact that same, heavy toll of others by our communications—killing silence, by denying others recognition, appreciation and tenderness. Our untapped anger thus becomes a deadly poison which must get out of our system or make us deathly ill and even kill us.

Get the poison out! Don't wait days, weeks, months, or even years until you become a Mt. St. Helens ready to blow your top. Unmasking your hurts, admitting them, dealing with them and growing through them is all part of the command of Jesus to take your cross upon your shoulders daily and to come after him.

Three months ago, Michael was running from his family. And from himself.

Today, he's taking life one step at a time. And his family's enjoying every minute of it.

Michael stopped running with the help of the skilled, dedicated people at Slidell Memorial's 2 North Psychiatric Unit.

Psychiatrists, psychologists, and specially-trained nurses—each with an uncommon sense of caring, worked with Michael to show him that the best parts of life were the times he took to really take a look at it.

Specialized treatment anyone can understand.

Psychiatric treatment can assume many forms over many years. Often, treatment is too complex for anyone to fully grasp.

But at 2 North Psych., through dramatic, occupational, recreational, and musical therapies, we encourage patients to use their feelings creatively, channeling them outward. Conflicts become smoother, questions are answered. And patients learn to grow, naturally and emotionally strengthened.

We want our patients to re-enter their lives quickly, happily. By establishing a pulse for their days as healthy as the one they establish for their bodies.

SHOPPING UP A STORM

With all the tasty meat "specials" at area supermarkets just now, let's cook up some "special" dishes from them, shall we?

Bone-in beef chuck roast is a bargain at National—an excellent top-of-the-stove dish, leaving the kitchen comparatively cool, a boon to the summer cook. And, for a tangy variation on the usual pot roast and vegetable combination—potatoes, carrots and onions—try:

POT ROAST DIABLO
(Quick and Easy)
1 1/4 to 5 lb. chuck roast
1 cup onion, finely chopped
2 tsp. salt
1 cup chili sauce
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup Worcestershire sauce

1/2 cup vegetable oil
1/2 cup beef broth, divided
1/2 cup pepper
1/2 cup all-purpose flour
2 cups prepared mustard
1/2 cup vinegar
1/2 cup water
Brown roast on all sides in a large Dutch oven or roasting pan. Pour off all but a few drippings, and add 1/2 cup of the broth, 1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 cup Worcestershire sauce, 1/2 cup vegetable oil, 1/2 cup beef broth, divided, 1/2 cup pepper, 1/2 cup all-purpose flour, 2 cups prepared mustard, 1/2 cup vinegar, 1/2 cup water. Brown roast on all sides in a large Dutch oven or roasting pan. Pour off all but a few drippings, and add 1/2 cup of the broth, 1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 cup Worcestershire sauce, 1/2 cup vegetable oil, 1/2 cup beef broth, divided, 1/2 cup pepper, 1/2 cup all-purpose flour, 2 cups prepared mustard, 1/2 cup vinegar, 1/2 cup water. Brown roast on all sides in a large Dutch oven or roasting pan. Pour off all but a few drippings, and add 1/2 cup of the broth, 1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 cup Worcestershire sauce, 1/2 cup vegetable oil, 1/2 cup beef broth, divided, 1/2 cup pepper, 1/2 cup all-purpose flour, 2 cups prepared mustard, 1/2 cup vinegar, 1/2 cup water. Brown roast on all sides in a large Dutch oven or roasting pan. Pour off all but a few drippings, and add 1/2 cup of the broth, 1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 cup Worcestershire sauce, 1/2 cup vegetable oil, 1/2 cup beef broth, divided, 1/2 cup pepper, 1/2 cup all-purpose flour, 2 cups prepared mustard, 1/2 cup vinegar, 1/2 cup water. Brown roast on all sides in a large Dutch oven or roasting pan. Pour off all but a few drippings, and add 1/2 cup of the broth, 1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 cup Worcestershire

1/2 tsp. garlic powder
1/2 tsp. basil
1/4 tsp. black pepper
1 jar (16 oz.) meatless spaghetti sauce (or use tomato sauce and make your own)
1 pkg. (10 oz.) frozen spinach, thawed and drained well
1 pkg. (8 oz.) mozzarella cheese, shredded
3 Tbsp. grated Parmesan cheese

Mix up in a large bowl the ground beef, egg, bread crumbs, oregano, garlic powder, basil, pepper and a half-cup spaghetti sauce. On waxed paper, pat meat mixture into 9 inch square. Spread the spinach—remember, well drained! I squeeze mine dry to one inch of the edge, and sprinkle mozzarella cheese over. Starting at one end, roll meat, lifting waxed paper to help shape roll, until ends slightly overlap. Pinch edges to seal.

Place rolled loaf, seam-side down, in 9-by-5-inch pan, and cover with waxed paper. Cook on medium for 16 to 20 minutes, rotating dish a half turn after 8 minutes. Drain and discard juices. Pour half cup of spaghetti sauce over meat loaf, reserving remaining sauce to use another day. Sprinkle with Parmesan, and cook, uncovered on High for 2 minutes. Cover loosely with waxed paper, and let stand 5 minutes. (Six servings.)

Eggs Renaissance make elegant brunch

Renaissance means "rebirth or revival," and "Baked Eggs Renaissance" celebrates the revival of elegant (but easy) dining, with "do-it-yourself" flair. The secret? Making convenience foods work for you, while retaining a personal touch.

Baked Eggs Renaissance take advantage of frozen puff-pastry patty shells (which mysteriously rise to lofty heights). Whole eggs bake neatly inside. Combine bottled salad dressing and frozen chopped spinach for a savory sauce to spoon on top. You'll have a fancy brunch, lunch or dinner dish ready in no time.

Eggs are one of the original convenience foods, yet don't carry a value-added price. Packaged in a protective shell, they're ready to use with a crack! Simply store in the carton, in the refrigerator, large end up. (But, not next to onions or other pungent foods, please, because eggs absorb flavors easily.)

BAKED EGGS RENAISSANCE
3 to 6 servings

1 package (10 oz.) frozen patty shells (6 shells)
6 eggs
1 cup (8 oz.) reduced-calorie ranch-style salad dressing
1/4 cup milk
1/2 teaspoon dill weed
1/2 package (5 oz.) frozen chopped spinach, thawed, drained and pressed
Fresh dill weed sprigs, optional

Begin to bake patty shells according to package directions. After 20 minutes, remove from oven. Reduce temperature to 375 degrees F. Carefully remove centers of tops and soft pastry underneath. Set aside.

Break and slip 1 egg into each shell, continue baking until egg yolks are almost set, about 17 to 20 minutes.

Meanwhile, stir together dressing, milk and dill weed until well blended. Stir in spinach. Set aside.

Remove shells from oven. Garnish with dill weed, if desired. Serve with reserved sauce.

*Bake tops alongside filled shells and serve as lids, if desired.

Mowry, who has won a number of Pass Christian Historical Society projects shortly after her arrival in North Carolina in 1980, considers herself a "caretaker" for Win-Ru Scenic Drive residence. "I consider all people in these houses caretakers of their property," she says. Some of the historic homes owned by people natives of Pass Christian, others, like Mowry, their homes because they are charmed by the quality of Scenic Drive. Pass Christian's historic homes to be protected by ordinance

BY DENA BISNETTE
Pass Christian now has an ordinance and a commission specifically dedicated to historic preservation.

Ordinance 491 became effective in June and work is continuing on guidelines which will help people who want to remodel or expand a historic building without destroying its distinctive appearance, said Pat Mowry, head of the commission. The nine-member commission also includes Eaton Lang, an attorney who serves as commission secretary; Charlton Jones, vice-chairman, who has assisted with photographs and computer work; Volney Cissna, a part-time city planner who has supplied maps of the historic areas; Otis Trepagnier, mapping assistant; Ann Bode, typist and guidelines; Betty Rogers and Jane Maunsell, both working on guidelines; and William Hartwell, an appraiser assisting with photography.

The members are all unpaid volunteers, and according to Mowry, have little in common except their concern for historic preservation. They meet on the second Wednesday of each month at 5 p.m. at city hall, and welcome anyone interested in preservation.

One reason for the success in getting Ordinance 491 approved has been the mixture of different talents each commission member has, she added.

"We have such a good rapport, all of us working together, that this has been really nice."

"We've been trying to do this since 1979, and now we have a mayor and a board of aldermen who really appreciate the history and the flavor of Pass Christian," Mowry stated.

The idea for a preservation ordinance, commission and guidelines originally surfaced in 1979 when part of Pass Christian, officially declared a historic district by the Mississippi Department of Archives

"Scenic Drive remains the largest architecturally intact major 19th Century resort area in the South and one of only a few in the nation like Cape May, N.J., and Newport, R.I., that have managed to retain most of their original character."

The district includes 22 antebellum structures and 76 structures built or restored to their present appearance before 1912, Mowry said.

Two structures originally built on the beach but later moved to the southern side of Second Street are included, along with one commercial building on Davis Avenue and a every property in the district, as well as descriptions of each one. Paperwork for the project has taken more than two years to complete.

Some of the historic homes are currently for sale, and Mowry said the information on them should be useful to buyers who want to renovate or add to their homes.

The guidelines will be available soon and she hopes they will be considered constructive and helpful. They are more detailed than the ordinance itself and are being written and edited on a computer right now.

The finished product will include information on such topics as renovating without altering the roofline, historically correct paint colors and types of architecture appropriate to the climate for those constructing new homes.

The ordinance prohibits demolition of a historic structure without commission approval, but does not prohibit new construction. Any new construction, however, must be compatible with the prevailing appearance of the district.

Mowry gives a cottage on West Beach as an example. Built on the site of a home destroyed by fire, the four-year-old residence is the only new structure in the otherwise intact 700 block of old homes.

It is the continuity, after all, that attracts people to the Scenic Drive area, explained Mowry, who lives in one of the historic homes.

"I go for my walk every day and I see lots of people slowing down to take a look at the homes here. I think it's the continuity that attracts even people who are not interested in preservation," she explained.

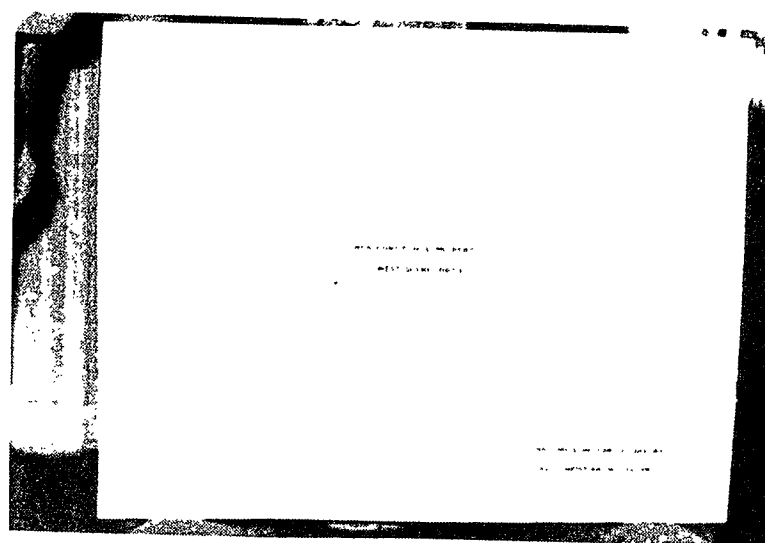

"Our goal is preserve not just a few isolated landmarks but to conserve and enhance the buildings and neighborhoods that give this community its unique flavor and beauty, but to adapt them to the needs of the present and future so they may lend dignity, continuity and variety to the future."

Every case presented to the commission for approval of renovations, addition or alteration will be decided on an individual basis.

"The commission wants to ensure that all improvement plans will respect the character and integrity of the entire area as well as its buildings. Otherwise, an individual can find that the environment of his carefully restored home is to be destroyed by some poorly conceived 'improvement.'"

"This is not to say that the district must remain static," Mowry added. "Well-designed new amenities and buildings can be compatible with and enhance the old, adding vitality to a historic neighborhood."

Copies of the ordinance are available at Pass Christian City Hall.

Pass Christian's historic district and History, was entered into the National Register of Historic Places (U.S. Department of the Interior).

"It just took a long time," Mowry explained. Research for the project included obtaining copies of historic preservation ordinances in other cities and selection of those points appro-row of cottages on Seal Avenue. The two latter sites are included due to architectural significance and visibility from the beachfront.

The West Beach area was once a five-mile stretch of historically important residences, but the area's continuity was destroyed by Hurricane Camil-appropriate for Pass Christian. In addition, some commissioners attended a Hattiesburg conference on preservation and Cissna mapped the entire area, designating each structure.

Pass Christian has also been nominated by the Landmark Commission, a division of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, for its "American Way of Life" designation.

The National Trust's description of Pass Christian states, le in 1969. The remaining buildings are included in the district on an individual basis.

Another unique quality which designates the Pass Christian Historic District is inclusion of more than 15 different architectural styles.

The commission also has the authority to add other existing structures to the district if they are found to have proper historic significance.

The commission has obtained black-and-white photographs of versity of Southern Mississippi and William Carey. When she travels, she seeks out historic districts to visit.

She found the one in Pass Christian by accident during a brief period when she lived in New Orleans. Pass Christian is the first place where she has bought and maintained a historian in order to take advantage of natural light.

"Most of these beachfront homes were built specifically for this climate. They have great cross-ventilation because there was no air conditioning."

With some informal advice from decorators Marcia Artigues and Ann Stewart, Mowry has decorated the home herself.

Many owners of the older homes in town have used antiques to furnish their homes, and Mowry is no exception. Most of her furnishings, however, are in 1800s styles somewhat older than her home.

She has also made use of light colors, like her favorite yellow, to give the home character.

"It was a labor of love," she explained.

Keeping up the large white house can be expensive and time consuming.

"You either have to be able to do things yourself or have the money to hire out the work," Mowry explained. "A historic home is perfect for a jack of all trades."

She does her own landscaping, some painting and maintenance projects like mildew control.

She contracts for services like termite control, repair of a broken gate on her picket fence and some specialty carpentry, like some work she is planning to have done on her front door.

"It's a continuous job. There's always something you could be doing. And when you find something that needs fixing, like one rotted board, you usually discover two or three other things which need to be done."

"I do something every day. If you skip a week, it's just going to wait for you," she added.

Her husband, Jim Mowry, enjoys living in the old house and is supportive of her maintenance efforts, she said.

Mowry wants to maintain the present appearance of the exterior of Win-Rush, but wonders what the house looked like inside.

"When I bought this house, it was empty," she said. "I'd love to see some old pictures."

"I've always loved the beach, and when I saw Pass Christian, that was heaven. Now I've got the beach and history too," she said.

Mowry, who has worked with a number of Pass Christian Historical Society projects since shortly after her arrival from North Carolina in about 1968, considers herself a "full-time caretaker" for Win-Rush, her Scenic Drive residence.

"I consider all people who live in these houses caretakers of their property," she said.

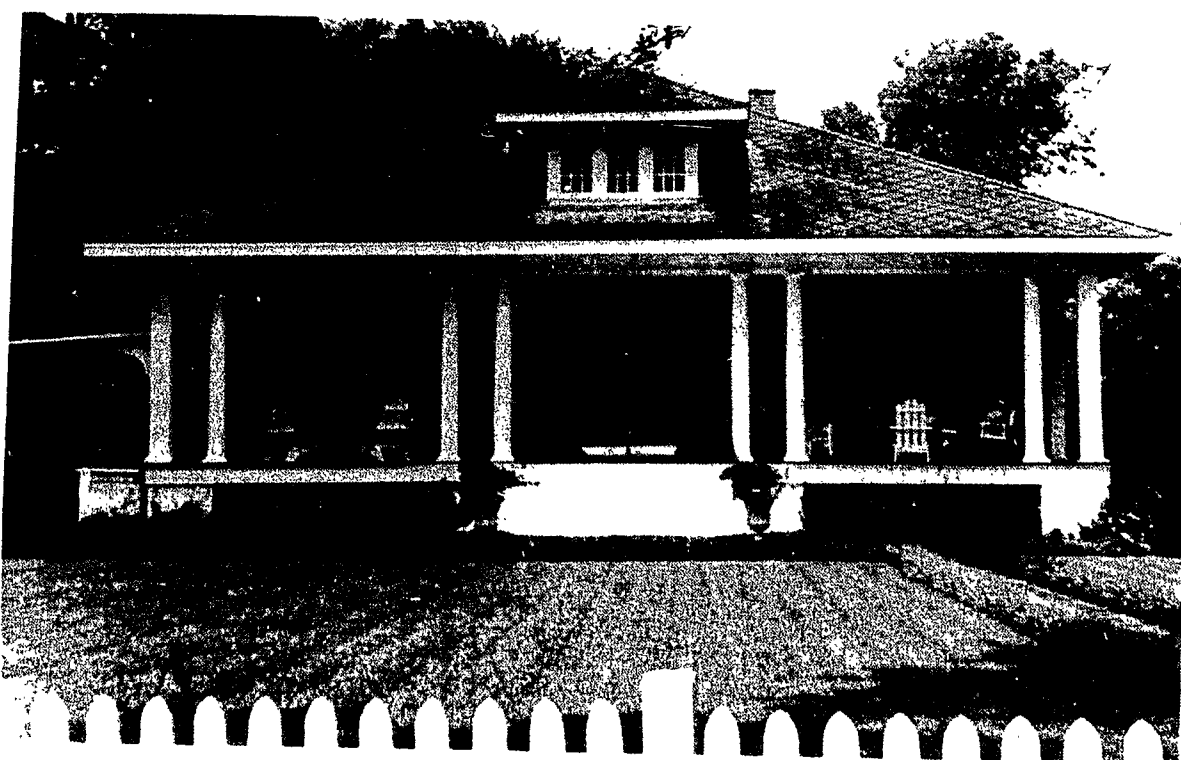

Some of the historic homes are owned by people who are natives of Pass Christian, but others, like Mowry, bought their homes because they were charmed by the quaint, historic quality of Scenic Drive.

Mowry is from North Carolina and was a history major, studying at Averette College in Danville, Va., and later at University of Southern Mississippi and William Carey. When she travels, she seeks out historic districts to visit.

She eventually moved to a home on Second Street, then bought Win-Rush, which was built circa 1900 and is on the U.S. Department of Interior's National Register of Historic Places.

"This house reminds me of my grandmother's house," Mowry stated. Among her favorite features are the large front porch, high ceilings and a sun room with large windows she has decorated with lace cur-

Now is time to plant fall vegetables

By Dr. Milo Burnham
Horticulturist
Mississippi Cooperative
Extension Service

Many Mississippi vegetable gardens disappear in August. Some vegetable plants, such as bush snap beans and peas, are finished producing. Others, such as squash and tomatoes, have been overcome by diseases and insects and abandoned. Some are just overcome by the heat.

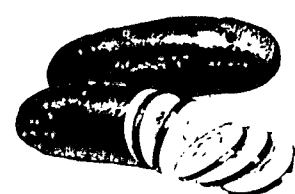

Weeds and grasses, almost uncontrollable this year because of the frequent rains, may tower over smaller vegetable plants, hiding all but the corn stalks, pole beans and okra.

August doesn't have to signal the end to vegetable gardens or the garden season; it can in fact be the beginning of another round of very productive gardening. If you've ever attended one of the fall vegetable field days at the MAFES Truck Crops Experiment Station in Crystal Springs, you know there are many vegetables that can be planted in August and September for fall harvest.

Among the most popular vegetables for fall planting are bush snap beans, summer squash, cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower, spinach, mustard, turnips, collards, lettuce, rutabaga, Chinese cabbage, beets, Swiss chard and radishes. With some of these vegetables there is the opportunity to plant seeds in August or set out transplants in September.

Cabbage, broccoli and cauliflower seeds can be planted in August in the garden or in cups harvest in October.

Fall gardening is not trouble free, but it's worth the effort; particularly this year when spring and early summer gardening were not as successful as expected. Be prepared to continue fighting insects, weeds and diseases.

higher from the time of digging to break the natural dormancy.

Dormant potatoes won't sprout for several weeks or longer after planting, if they sprout at all. I've seen potatoes planted in August sprouting in November, just in time for the first killing frost.

An alternative to warm storage to break dormancy is to dip the potatoes momentarily in a water solution of gibberellic acid. This is not a chemical readily available to most gardeners but is used by camellia enthusiasts to promote large, early blooms.

One expert I checked with said while gibberellic acid does work to break dormancy, the potato plants make some funny looking growth. They do, however, produce potatoes.

Chinese cabbage is one of those vegetables that is best when grown in the fall. Our typical spring weather does not remain cool long enough for this vegetable to develop properly. With just the smallest amount of hot weather at maturity, the plants go to seed.

So planting is recommended in fall when the day and night temperatures are in the decline. Seeds planted in mid to late August produce plants for harvest in October and November.

Whether or not you grow a fall vegetable garden this year, mark Oct. 26 on your calendar for the Fall Vegetable Field Day in Crystal Springs. I'll write more about this event as it gets closer.

in Mississippi
Gardens

Irish potatoes planted in February and March disappointed a lot of gardeners because of wet soils during the growing season and at harvest. Unfortunately, Irish potatoes are not a likely candidate for success in the fall garden. They can be grown if seed potatoes can be located, but chances of this are slim.

Several years ago I advised gardeners to purchase about 10 pounds of extra seed potatoes in the spring and hold them in the refrigerator until planting time in August. Small whole potatoes were more successful than cut seed pieces that were more likely to rot in the hot, moist soil when planted.

Spring dug potatoes don't make good seed potatoes for fall planting without some prior planning. Ideally, store spring potatoes intended as seed for fall planting at 70 degrees or for growing plants to set out in the garden. Transplants of these vegetables, if you can find them at a local nursery or if you've grown them, can be set out in the garden in September.

Seeds of spinach, mustard, turnips, radishes and leaf lettuce can be planted in early September for harvest in October and November. Bush snap beans and summer squash planted in August are ready for

American Legion Auxiliary Unit 139

The regular monthly meeting of Clement R. Bontemps American Legion Auxiliary Unit 139 was held on Monday, Aug. 24 at the Legion home.

Mrs. Margaret Prevou, president, opened the meeting; the color-bearers, Mmes. Hazel Wohlschlegel and Roslyn Weathers, advanced the colors.

Mrs. Ursula Favre, chaplain, read the prayers. Mrs. Prevou led the members in the Pledge of Allegiance followed by the recitation of the Preamble.

The roll call of officers was taken by the acting secretary, Mrs. Janet Aime. A motion was made to dispense with the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting so that we could hear guest speaker Mrs. Phyllis Moran, past president of the Mississippi State Auxiliary and also a member of Unit 139.

Mrs. Moran spoke on the various committees and their functions. There are many of these, but she gave us the highlights of the ones we are most concerned with.

Over the years there have been many changes, and it is good to hear and learn of these changes.

Some of the committees that were mentioned are Americanism, Auxiliary Emergency Fund, Children and Youth, Community Service, Education, Foreign Relations, Girls' State, Leadership, Legislative, National Security, Public Relations and last, but not most important, Veterans.

After each committee was mentioned, a question and answer forum was held, and each member understood more clearly what was expected.

We would like to express our thanks to Mrs. Moran for her interesting and informative talk.

Mrs. Bobby Tomlinson, treasurer, reported on the financial status of the unit.

The color-bearers then retired the colors, the chaplain read the closing prayers and the president read the formal closing, adjourning the meeting.

American Legion Auxiliary Unit 77

The unit started the year off with the state convention, where several of the committee chairmen won awards, some of which were sent to the national convention for judging.

The next event was installation of officers. They are: president, Shirley Cox; first vice president, Elizabeth (Betty) LaFontaine; second vice president, Mayola Rotherham; secretary, Irene Giacomini; treasurer, Helen Rohrbacker; historian, Gloria Norton; chaplain, Mary Cailhier; sergeant-at-arms, Marion Dorn; and executive committee, Helene Coleman, Hedi Klein, Marjorie Leech, and ex-officio, Janice Carver.

The installation was beautiful with all officers wearing formal gowns. The installing officer was the president of the State of Mississippi Auxiliary, Mrs. Barbara Perkins.

The first regular meeting was held August 1 with members getting down to business for the coming year.

A priority is working to bring funds into the auxiliary in order to help with the programs for Children and Youth, Veterans and Community. The main fundraiser is a regular benefit held every Tuesday. The auxiliary will still continue to have dinners, dances and other ways to bring in funds. With the help of all members, the auxiliary will be first in the state in all committees including 'Membership.'

USM Oral History Program yields two local Camille tales

(EDITOR'S NOTE: These are two of a series of stories tracing the death and destruction caused by Hurricane Camille on the Mississippi Gulf Coast 20 years ago. The stories are based on interviews conducted with survivors a decade ago by the University of Southern Mississippi Oral History Program, currently directed by Reid Derr. The interviewer was R. Wayne Pyle.)

By Phil Hearn

Bay St. Louis physician Henry Maggio was enjoying the good life until the killer storm gobbled up his home.

Maggio, 33, had a wife, Bobbie, and three children. He had a successful general practice in Bay St. Louis and a stylish quipped 11 years later, during a 1980 interview with the University of Southern Mississippi's Oral History Program.

With only five medical practitioners in town, Maggio found himself on call that weekend along with Dr. Marion Dodson. He packed his family off to the pi Gulf Coast with 20 plus-mile-an-hour winds and tidal surge of up to 30 feet.

"It (the water) came to approximately one inch of coming into the hospital, which was quite frightening," said Maggio.

When Maggio and Dodson left the hospital the following morning, they were stunned by the devastation.

Here's how Maggio, a New Orleans native and Loyola University medical school graduate, described the scene.

"When we got down to the Bay St. Louis Bridge... a four-lane cement bridge that was quite a formidable structure, I was amazed that it had been razed, stacked like dominoes..."

"We went down the first two blocks of Beach Boulevard to Main Street and I looked farther down, and all visible piers and houses and business structures that were located on the beach side were gone..."

"When I got to my house (nearly 100 years old), I had a tremendous shock, because I looked and the entire lot was clean. There was not anything left standing on the lot except two oak trees that were hanging on for dear life..."

"There were people walking around in dazed disbelief—knowing, yet trying to deny and trying to reconcile that they had just been through something historical, trying to fit into this picture just where they themselves belonged."

Waveland Alderman John Longo Jr., later to become mayor, recalled, "The debris, death and destruction were unreal. There weren't any birds, the trees were leafless and barkless, skinless."

Waveland widow Jennie Jeneven, 61, and neighbors Joseph and Nora Sheehan, barely escaped the storm's rising water by climbing into a boat, chained inside Mrs. Jeneven's carport at her home about a block and a half from the Gulf.

"From 11 p.m. to 7 in the morning, it seemed like it would never get daylight," Jeneven said prior to her death in 1980. "When daylight did come, we saw the scorpions all around, and we walked back and saw the snakes in the swimming pool and the crawfish..."

Mrs. Sheehan, also 61, said her husband, who suffered from emphysema, was shattered by the loss of "everything we had accumulated and worked for all through our years." His health deteriorated from that point, she said, and he died in 1974.

Maggio, who became a psychiatrist and now resides in Bay

St. Louis, noted the storm left deep psychological scars. But he said an unprecedented sense of community unity, people helping people, was evident in the weeks and months following Camille.

"The thin veneer of civilization that we talk about held pretty good," he said. "People were genuinely interested in each other and not in materialism at that time."

In nearby Pass Christian, where Camille did its worst, that city's late police chief, Jerry Peralta, put it this way:

"I would say more people died after Camille because of broken hearts and worries than were actually killed in Camille... I mean, you take somebody in their 60s or 70s, and to wipe them out completely—they don't have anything—I mean that's heartbreaking."

Paul Williams wanted to find a quiet place, somewhere he and 16 other family members could ride out the approaching storm in peace and safety.

An adjacent auditorium of Pass Christian's historic Trinity Episcopal Church, where Williams served as sexton, seemed like an ideal place for refuge. The church had weathered 18 hurricanes since its construction in 1849.

So after getting permission from the church rector, the Rev. Durrie Harding, Williams moved into the church auditorium that Sunday evening, Aug. 17, 1969, with his wife, 11 children, three grandchildren and one son-in-law.

Williams, nearly 50, a black hard working son of an itinerant wood-cutter, had lived through the Gulf Coast hurricane of 1947 and Hurricane Betsy in 1965.

How was he to know that Hurricane Camille—then zeroing in on Pass Christian with 200-plus-mile-an-hour winds and 30-foot tidal waves—would demolish the church and with it his family?

The caretaker, a native of Lula, Miss., survived the ordeal that followed that night, along with one son and his son-in-law. His wife, 10 children and three grandchildren perished in the carnage of Camille.

In an interview with the University of Southern Mississippi's Oral History Program 12 years later, Williams described the night of death and destruction:

"We took us some food, and we was in the auditorium. We kind of got there late, so we all bedded down. I hooked up the TV and got that going, the radio (too) so we'd know what they were saying (about the storm)..."

"A little later on, the

Then, came Hurricane Camille that night of Aug. 17, 1969, and things were never quite the same.

"Everything was going along well, and the grand and great storm came from the Gulf one day and blew my house up," he home of a friend in Piquette, closed the storm windows at his house and reported for duty at the Bay St. Louis hospital.

About 50 patients at the hospital were joined by another 200 elderly storm refugees "sitting on little cots and chairs in the hallway." Most were evacuated by helicopter that night as Camille pounded the Mississippi children—oh, they were having so much fun. Oh, it was just unbelievable...

Camille

"And so I said, 'Ya'll come here, I want to tell you something.' They didn't want to listen—just kept on ripping around and tearing. So I said, 'Hear this! Hear This! Now, if the water come in here, we will go upstairs!'"

"And sure enough, just about when I was trying to sleep, my son-in-law come in and said, 'Pa, Pa, the water is coming in!'"

As the water flooded into the church auditorium about 10:30 p.m., Williams began moving his family up a 12-foot, pull-down ladder to an attic ordinarily used for storage. But the water kept rising, as Camille's devastating winds battered the old church, more modern auditorium and nearby rectory.

Williams continued: "The water come on in the building and the building was so tight, it come on in upstairs and started tumbling over stuff. Some of my children said, 'Daddy, Daddy, what are we going to do?'"

As he attempted to climb the ladder to join his family in the attic, the wind and water took over.

"All I remember is hearing the board crack, that's all I remember. I had done flew through the air...and I went down in the water."

Grabbing hold of a passing tree, Williams was swept into the adjacent Live Oak Cemetery, where he found refuge in the fork of a standing tree amid the swirling waters, mounting debris, toppled tombstones and unearthed coffins that regurgitated from freshly dug, inundated graves.

"When that church went down, it washed all of them out there into the cemetery," remembered Pass resident Fred DeMetz, then a 66-year-old retired carpenter who was struggling to survive the storm's fury with his family at a nearby residence.

"The helpless part was to know that these people back there in the cemetery were being washed through there hollering...and you couldn't help. There was no way in the world to go help them, with the water washing all over," DeMetz recalled in a 1979 interview, prior to his death in 1982.

The next morning, as rescue workers moved in, Williams and the other two family survivors began the grisly task of recovering the bodies of their loved ones.

"And my son (Malcolm), he didn't want me to see my wife because he said, 'Daddy, Mama got her neck broke. We don't want you to see her.' And so, I didn't see her—and I guess maybe it was good that I didn't. I don't know," Williams said. Jerry Peralta, Pass Christian police chief at the time, remembered watching the recovery of bodies at Live Oak Cemetery.

"The thing that hurt me most, like I say, was the man (Williams) with his family, because I watched him carrying (the bodies). He carried them out of the cemetery and laid them right on the sidewalk," said Peralta, who also was interviewed prior to his death in 1982.

The church rectory also was destroyed, claiming the life of the pastor's wife, Helen Harding.

Mississippi State ranks high among research universities

Mississippi State University ranks 16th among the nation's universities in the level of its research and development activities in agricultural sciences and 21st in aeronautical engineering, according to the latest data available from the National Science Foundation.

The university also ranks 57th in social sciences research and development and 70th in engineering research and development. Aeronautical and astronautical engineering is listed as a subfield of the engineering category.

Mississippi State ranks 95th among U.S. colleges and universities in research and development in all science and engineering fields combined, according to NSF reports. Among public institutions, MSU ranks 66th.

The NSF rankings are based on research expenditures for fiscal year 1987 in the fields of engineering, physical sciences, environmental sciences, math and computer sciences, life sciences, psychology, social sciences and other sciences. Mississippi State's R&D expenditures in those areas totaled more than $40 million.

According to the NSF data, Mississippi State receives about 53 percent of the federal support for research and development in science and engineering awarded to higher education institutions in Mississippi.

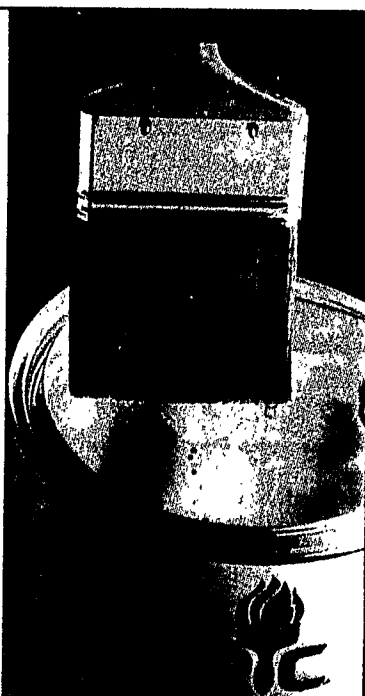

The university receives about 40 percent of the federal funds directed to all types of academic science and engineering programs in state colleges and universities, and about 22 percent of all federal obligations to higher education in the state, for all types of activities.

The NSF report on federal support to higher education covers awards to 39 institutions in Mississippi, including private colleges as well as the state universities and community colleges. MSU is the only Mississippi university among the top 100 research and development institutions.

Vice President for Research Ralph Power said the NSF reports "demonstrate that Mississippi State University faculty have been competitive on a national basis for money to support their research and development activities."
